MILITARY LAW AND THE PROCEDURE OF COURT MARTIAL.

By EDGAR S. DUDLEY, LL. B., LL. D., Colonel, Judge Advocate, U. S. Army, Professor of Law at the United States Military Academy, West Point, New York. New York; John Wiley & Sons: London; Chapman & Hall, Limited. 1907. Pp. ix, 650.

While this book has been prepared primarily to meet the necessity at the United States Military Academy for a text book which should give in relatively brief compass a clear and thorough outline of the science of military law it will prove instructive reading to any one interested in its subject matter as well as a valuable source of information in regard to questions not infrequently arising with respect to the extent of the military power in the punishment of offenses, and its relation to the civil power.

The subject matter is well arranged and the various steps of procedure in military courts are lucidly and concisely treated. Following this portion of the book is a chapter covering not far from one-third of the text in which the articles of war are separately considered.

Appendices are added containing, inter alia, the text of the articles of war, and general forms.
